«Science and Knowledge in Criminal Justice in the Era of (In)Security»

The Erasmus BIP «Science and Knowledge in Criminal Justice in the Era of (In)Security» deals with the recent developments that have taken place in criminal justice systems to fight new criminal phenomena that more and more endanger public order and security. Whereas there is no doubt that security today also stands out among the most precious individual rights and legal goods of the utmost relevance, the increase of securitist concerns requires the enhancement of criminal-law intervention on both fields on substantive and procedural law. In the current era of growing insecurity, crime control and criminal investigation sets huge challenges with a view to the achievement of proper trade-offs between prosecutorial needs and individual rights, while calling for new forms of judicial knowledge, especially in the light of the scientific and technological evolution. In particular, the digital transition has already entailed radical changes in investigative and judicial practices, while calling for new criminal-justice policies in legal scenarios characterised by an increasing inter-legality and inter-judicial confrontation. Against this background, the emergence of unprecedented forms of organised and terrorism-related crimes, due to their negative impact mainly on security, stability, the rule of law, and sustainable development, requires the strengthening of a comparative-law approach, which turns out to be an indispensable tool to face the enormous difficulties set by cross-border cases.

The Course will take place in a blended form. The first week shall be devoted to teaching activities, which will be held on the days 3-4 July online, and 6-7 July at the Law Department of Messina University. The second week will be dedicated to a moot court competition. The days of 10 July and 11 July will be committed to the introduction and preparation of the moot court. On 12 July and 13 July, the moot court competition will take place. In this phase, students will have the opportunity for showing the achievements and knowledge gained during the course.
